

OBSTINATE JURORS.

Judge Gildersleeve Cannot See How they can Disagree so Often.

Charles Brown and William Harrington, inmates of 157½ Stanton street, took their wives to High Bridge on the fourth of July. There they drank beer, and because Mrs. Brown drank too much Brown said that he would punish her. Soon after the return home a heavy fall was made down a hill. Mrs. Brown was severely injured, and her husband was arrested. She died soon afterward. Brown was tried yesterday in the General Sessions on the charge of killing his wife. The testimony for the defense was that Mrs. Brown approached her husband and he pushed her. She fell backward to the floor, and she was killed. The jury deliberated for two hours, and then they announced that they could not agree.

"I never before saw so many disagreements in this court as have occurred in the present case," said the judge. "The case is far from being a clear-cut one, and subjecting it to a second trial will be a waste of time and money, and more important, impeding the administration of justice. I cannot comprehend how twice in the same day you can come to such a meaning of facts that are put before all in the same light."

"You are right, and the jury stands in disgrace when it fails to come to one for conviction. None else."

"The man who stood up," interrupted the fourth juror, Edward Faulkner, formerly an officer of the court. "I could not see any evidence that would justify the conviction."

"I presume," Judge Gildersleeve replied, "it is in the case of the State against the defendant that the jury is discharged from the further consideration of the case. The fourth juror is discharged from attendance hereafter."

Chinese Gamblers in Court.

Charles Williams and William Ham, particularly phlegmatic Chinamen, were arraigned yesterday, in the General Sessions, on the charge of keeping the Chinese gambling house at 34 Mott street. Williams had difficulty in keeping awake. Detective Wade of the Mulberry street police detected the Chinaman's eyes closing, and the jury convicted Williams and Ham. When asked to say what he had to say, Williams said, "I am a man, and I have a wife." "A very old man, aged about 60, with hair piec'd." They were sent to the penitentiary for short terms.

In the Poorhouse at Ninety.

With wealthy relatives, well-to-do children and grandchildren, an old lady, aged over 90 years, was compelled to apply and was on Friday received in the poorhouse. Her name is Mrs. Mary Peacock. Peacock comes to divulge her name, but now her family, and says that she asks only for a quiet place in which she may await death, with a little food and water. The woman is a widow, and she has been married three times. She had a considerable property, but was persuaded to part with it long ago.
